Pisang Peak Climbing Overview

Pisang Peak stands at elevation of 6091 meters up above from Pisang village in Annapurna Himalaya range and yak pastures in a uniform slope of ice and snow to the final summit pyramid. Pisang Peak climbing is considered one of the busy climbing peaks among the trekking peaks in Nepal.

To reach the base camp from Pisang village, the path ascends through sparse wood and pasture to a Kharka at 4420 meters, which is considered the best place for setting up the base camp. High camp is set up at 5450 meters, climbing to a shoulder on the South-West Ridge. There will be snow at the high camp from the end of November to the end of March.

The well-defined ridge leads to the final snow slope, which is quite steep but not difficult to reach the summit. Descent is made on the same route. The peak summit offers a truly beautiful view of the Annapurna group, including Tilicho Peak, Annapurna II and IV, Gangapurna and the Glacier Dome.

After the your main adventure of Pisang Peak climbing leads to Thorong La pass (5416 meters), through Manang, Yak Kharka, which are the main attraction of whole Annapurna Circuit trek. Due to the difficulties of crossing the pass, the circuit is usually walked in a counter clockwise direction.

We start our trek towards the Manang Valley after the successful summit and cross the world's highest pass, the Thorong La Pass early in the morning, and arrives at Muktinath, another part of Annapurna.

From there we go to Jomsom, Mustang's capital, with a small airstrip on the bank of the Kaligandaki River.

Taking a bunch of Himalaya experience, Pisang Peak climbing journey will end at the Jomsom, for a Jeep drive/flight to Pokhara in the early morning.

Pisang Peak Climbing Difficulty

This majestic mountain peak is located in Pisang, district of Manang, in the northern part of Nepal. It is situated between Annapurna and Manaslu. This is a popular climb as it provides great opportunities for discovery and climbing adventures. It is famous because it is easy to climb. Though, the summit ridge is little bit technical. The pyramid like summit of Pisang Peak lies on a way to the world's highest pass: Thorong La Pass. And it also represents the taste of Annapurna Circuit Trek to some extent.

Pisang Peak Climbing grades PD+, which means 'Per Difficulty' walking on certain parts of climb on rocks and glaciers which have technical difficulties.

The following are some of the major factors that specify the difficulty level on the Pisang Peak:

- The distance you cover during your entire trip
- Weather conditions of the location you are climbing to
- Your Physical Fitness
- Highest points of the peak Altitude sickness
- Basic Mountain climbing training

When is the best time to climb Pisang Peak?

Generally, Pisang Peak can be attempted year round. People have successfully summited Pisang peak even during the winter, however cold weather could be unfavorable to some, mainly if you are a beginner mountaineer. It is not that the mountain is technically difficult to climb, but it depends more on how confident you are with the winter months extremes.

While the peak can be climbed almost year-round, during spring (March to early June) and autumn (September to November) are the best and most suitable time to climb the Pisang Peak.

The weather appears to be clearer during autumn in Nepal, and it is by far the most popular time to climb the peak and high passes. Also, this is the best time to visit Nepal in general, and this time is when most tourists choose trekking and mountaineering in Nepal.

After the monsoon season can often get a bit crowded, but you can be pretty sure on the flip side that you will have the best weather conditions and climbing conditions.

I have never climbed peak before, can I go for peak climbing in Nepal?

There's always a first time for everything, including peak climbing. This is a non-technical peak, which a fit trekker can climb safely, and even somewhat technical peaks can be attempted by a beginner climber with a professional native Sherpa climbing guide.
