Trip Overview

Mt. Pumori literally means unmarried Daughter according to Sherpa language, was named by George Mallory, due to her location in the shade of Big E, which lies in Khumbu region on the border between Nepal and Tibet of Nepal.

It was first climbed in 1962 by Gerhard Lenser, member of a German-Swiss expedition. Standing at the altitude of 23494 ft., Pumori is one of the central attractions of Himalayas. Any trekker or the climber who has made a trip to Everest will always remember its distinctive shape.

In general, technically challenging Pumori Expedition is one of the best exercises for climbing Mt. Everest. This might be the dream of the almost climbers to put their feet on the Everest once before they die. Hence, we have used this expedition as a training peak for past Everest teams.

We hope this expedition can really fulfill your dream of reaching on the top of the Everest in your next effort if you trust once. This climb requires solid experience on climbing as well as physical fitness.

You need to be at least in 3 camps after base camp to reach the summit. The base camp is just above Gorekh-shep at the altitude of 5300 meters. After base camp, you can set up first camp at the altitude of 5,650 meters, around the phase of Mount Pumori.

You should set second camp at the ridge after the phase at the altitude of 6,000 meters. The most technical part for this peak is around camp 1 and 2. You should set camp 3 at the altitude of 6,480 meters, around the corner after the ridge.

You can ascend summit from the camp 3 to the top of Pumori. Most of the climbers use this route every year for the expedition to Mt. Pumori to climb.

Experience Required for Pumori Expedition

The Pumori Expedition is not for beginner mountaineers. Climbers must have knowledge of roped snow and ice climbing techniques (to protect from falling down the mountain or into crevasses). It is also required that all members will have an awareness of altitude sickness, frostbite, and the recognition of their symptoms, prevention, and treatment.

Once traveling above advanced base camp, all members must be prepared to be tied into the fixed lines or roped to another team member at all times. Neither solo climbing, nor descending, are allowed above advanced base camp.

Additionally, and perhaps most importantly, members need to join with a spirit of friendship, teamwork and cooperation, and be ready to work with the group and be a good “team-player”.

To participate in this expedition you must be a very fit and active walker-climber in good health. Make sure you have physically trained yourself very thoroughly before joining this climb of Asia’s most famous semi-technical rock-ice-snow climb. Climbers who have already climbed the peaks like Mera Peak; Island Peak can easily be involved in this trip.

Our Pumori Expedition is not “guided” because this is not a realistic proposition in the high-altitude realm of 7,000 meters and above. “Guiding” and being “guided” implies the intimate supervision and care of a “client” by a “guide” who can be responsible for the direct and immediate control of safety.

We believe on Pumori, such a direct duty-of-care, implicit in the traditional guide-client relationship, is not possible.

Itinerary

Day 01: Arrive in Kathmandu.
